Community Labs Announces New Community COVID-19 Testing Sites in Partnership with Rackspace Technology and Barshop Jewish Community Center

Friday, Feb. 5 is last day of testing at AT&T Center

(San Antonio, TX, Feb. 2, 2021) Community Labs, a nonprofit organization formed to provide COVID-19 screenings for asymptomatic individuals, will offer free, self-administered PCR tests to the general public at the Barshop Jewish Community Center and Rackspace Technology beginning the week of Feb. 8. It will cease operations at the AT&T Center after Friday, February 5.

“The AT&T Center has been a great partner, but the upcoming San Antonio Livestock Show and Rodeo and continuing NBA Spurs games pose significant scheduling restrictions,” said Community Labs president, Sal Webber. “We’re incredibly grateful to the Barshop Jewish Community Center and Rackspace Technology for offering us locations to continue to serve asymptomatic people who wish to be tested for COVID-19.”

“It is fantastic that Rackspace Technology co-founder Graham Weston and his fellow Community Labs co-founders J. Bruce Bugg and Tullos Wells have started a brilliant crusade to test and find the COVID-19 asymptomatic ‘silent spreaders,’ which has helped reopen schools, businesses, and even the economy,” said Kevin Jones, CEO, Rackspace Technology. “So, we jumped at the opportunity to help the Community Labs mission by offering Rackspace Technology headquarters for testing.”

“The health and safety of our community are paramount considerations, and the Barshop JCC and the Campus of the San Antonio Jewish Community are pleased to provide an opportunity to increase accessibility for COVID-19 asymptomatic testing through the efforts of Community Labs,” said Saul Levenshus, President and CEO, Barshop JCC.
